Photo Competition for Schools

Energy is essential to our daily lives. Most of the energy we use comes from fossil fuels such as oil, gas, coal and peat. Unfortunately, when they're burned to produce energy, they give off CO<sub>2</sub>, which causes climate change.

We can prevent this by using energy more wisely in our homes and schools. Also, by using renewable energy technologies we can combat climate change. Can one of your students capture this in a photo?

Assessment for Learning

Breda O' Brien, writing in the Irish Times on 22 January 2007, notes that while all teachers use assessment, most tend to think of it in terms of formal exams and tests. In other words, assessment is used to determine the level of a student's achievement on a particular task, or at the end of a module or term.

Assessment for learning (Afl), in contrast, uses assessment to give detailed feedback that helps students to understand things more clearly, to be more purposeful and organised in their work, and to become more effective learners. It also helps teachers to become more effective at teaching.

AfL includes approaches such as comment-only marking, where students receive brief comments that show what they did right, and what they can improve for the next time. Time And, for junior classes, traffic light marking can work well. A red dot indicates something that is wrong, an orange dot something that can be improved, and a green dot something that is very good.

Turnaround Leadership

In Turnaround Leadership, Michael Fullan shares his latest thinking on school reform. While the book raises many familiar issues in this area, it benefits from two positive attributes: big thinking and conciseness. In this small volume (97 pages), Fullan has set out ambitious goals, which he calls "the real reform agenda."

Fullan draws on Richard Wilkinson's (2005) research on the income of social inequality, which found that low material living conditions has less impact on the public than "low social status, which has corrosive social consequences".

Living the Mission

One day Alice came to a fork in the road and saw a Cheshire cat in a tree.

"Which road do I take?" she asked?

His response was a question: "Where do you want to go?"

"I don't know" said Alice.

"Then", said the cat, "it doesn't matter"
